Voices Matter

The May 22 issue seemed to point to a growing trend that citizens' voices don't matter. Letters expressing frustration that city officials "are not listening to us," letters expressing exasperation that offensive protest groups with "loud blaring megaphones" are being ignored by police and security. The opinion article from the University of Oregon that journalism is under attack and "silence is not neutrality." The "All A-Board" piece highlights the 80 percent dormant no-show in the Lane County May elections. Why vote, no one listens?

A healthy list of upcoming activist alerts around Lane County so people feel their voices are heard on issues of importance, such as cutting Oregon's national forests, with no prior input from the people about that mandate.
If Eugene Weekly isn't making it clear to you that decisions are being made by the officials in positions of power to silence you, censor your opposition, dismiss your efforts to stand up and stop government from destroying your constitutional rights, and just down right not care about what you have to say, then you are not listening. Speaking out to uphold citizens rights isn't the job of someone else, it's a job for each and every one of us. As the government slogan encourages — if you see something, say something.

A Closer Look at CAHOOTS

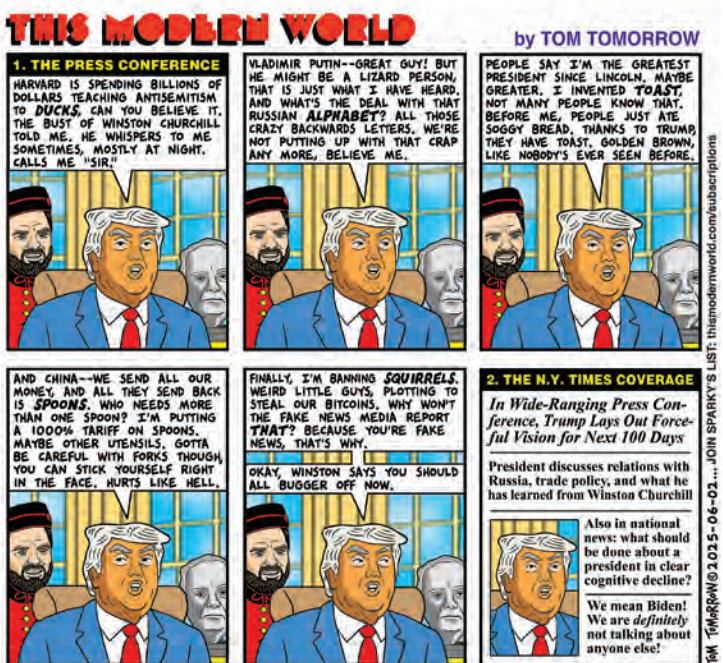

Regarding the financial cuts being made to the CAHOOTS program in Eugene, our city leaders would be wise to take a second look at what that means. Yes, Eugene joins the country in a national financial pinch, but if you take a closer look, it's clear these funding cuts are short-sighted and will likely result in higher costs for all.

I realized that on a recent trip to the Eugene Airport. Approaching a stoplight, I watched as two police cars and a fire engine, all with lights flashing, interacted with three young men who appeared modestly impaired. Despite one of the men sitting on a stretcher, they showed no sense of urgency.
My first thought upon seeing this was that this should absolutely be a CAHOOTS call. With a price tag for fire and ambulance calls averaging around $2,000 per call nationwide, the situation was both unnecessary and expensive as there was no need for such a high level of response.

Sure, CAHOOTS may be an expense for Eugene, but the cost of their response to a similar situation surely pales in comparison. And the community loves them! When it comes to what they offer in return compared to other services, including those the city is talking about implementing, there is no questioning the value of keeping them around.

Wake Up to No Lights
"Turn Out the Lights" (EW, 5/29) reminded me of a story.
Author Richard Louv, in his book Last Child in the Woods: Saving Our Children From Nature-Deficit Disorder, told a touching story about a Girl Scout field trip. Girls with AIDS from Los Angeles were taken to a camp in the mountains. One night, a nine-year-old girl woke up and had to go to the bathroom. Stepping outside, she looked up and gasped. Growing up in a sprawling megalopolis, she had never seen stars before. "That night, I saw the power of nature on a child. She was a changed person. From that moment on, she saw everything. She used her senses. She was awake."

30 years of life. I knew I had to escape to embrace a better existence, so after some research I landed in Eugene with a great job at a CPA firm and eventually progressed to a growing and state-of-the-art steel company.

As I was new to the area, I explored the Whiteaker bohemian neighborhoods, populated with unique abodes engulfed within the shadows of towering oak and pine trees. The culture was vintage “hippie” at the time, and I loved every minute of it. Then I discovered the abode of the Gods, the families who lived in the majestic mountain homes built in harmony with nature in an area that spanned from the Hendricks Park district all the way to City View Street in west Eugene.

I wondered if the fortunate beings who inhabited these castles and fortresses of the South Hills realized their lifestyle would be the envy of any transplant from my childhood domain. In a poetic sense, they were “Gods of the Mountains,” living close to the heavens and embraced by the green goddess of ornate trees, flowers and plants.

Support for Eugene Mission

We all know about the housing crisis in Eugene. As of today, Eugene has one of the highest per-capita rates of homelessness in the country, and it’s an issue that touches all of us. To help combat this issue, one organization that stands out in this effort to help the unhoused is the Eugene Mission. They provide not only shelter and meals, but also long-term support and programs that help people get back on their feet.

I’ve recently started a project to raise awareness and encourage donations for the Eugene Mission. I’m not affiliated with them, but I admire their work, and want to help in whatever way I can.

If you’re looking for a way to make a meaningful impact, I encourage you to learn more about the Eugene Mission and consider supporting them. Even a small gesture can help provide someone with warmth, safety, and a fresh start.

Here’s Another Viewpoint

Regarding your mention of “Free Speech every Thursday” on the cover of your May 29 edition: where was free speech when, a few short years ago, you were running half and full-page ads advocating that everyone has to get jabbed with the SARS COVID-2 vaccine in order to “protect granny?” It did not exist. At the time you resisted any mention of counter prevailing viewpoints. It was my way or the highway, as far as your editorial stance was concerned.

By the way, who was funding those ads?

You were even running ads advocating that children get the jab! I probably don’t need to remind everyone that the “science” behind that particular campaign was non-existent and very harmful to a lot of those kids.

Where was free speech in 2022 when you applauded the departure from Eugene of Rick Dancer, one time anchor of KEZI television, who dared to question the prevailing narrative on COVID? You dismissed him as Republican, as if that was a sufficient reason to condemn him and his viewpoints.

If you truly stand for free speech, you are welcome to publish this letter. It will indicate that alternative viewpoints are welcome in your newspaper.

Peter Holden
Eugene

Editor’s note: We love alternative viewpoints and we also prize accuracy! For the record, the ads stated clearly who was taking them out. And yes, we were (and continue to be) happy to accept ads and write stories advocating for medical science. And yes, it is free speech to express opinions on anti-vax social media personalities, who in this case is a self-identified Republican!

St. Isidore

What’s in a name?
More than you know.

St. Isidore of Seville is hardly a household name, but it is a name that will be widely associated with the separation of church and state, and quite possibly the dissolution thereof to the detriment of both. That it should be Isidore, considered the last scholar of the ancient world by one 19th century historian, is both telling and deeply disturbing.

Isidore served as the archbishop of Seville during the height of the Visigoth reign on the Iberian Peninsula. He is primarily known for his attempt to sum up all modern knowledge in a single work, the Etymologiae, consisting of 20 volumes and used as scholarly textbooks for nearly 900 years.

Isidore’s greatest relevance today is his considerable contribution to the promotion of antisemitism as a fundamental doctrine of both church and state. Writing for the Jewish Quarterly Review in 1990, Bat-Sheva Albert notes that Isidore is obsessed with Judaism in his writings, always speaking of the Hebrew faith in a derogatory manner, accusing Jews of deicide (the killing of Christ) at least 19 times and associating them with the Antichrist. Isidore stoops so low as to claim that Jewish stupidity

“is best represented by Abraham’s ass.”

Insults of an entire religious tradition is bad enough, but much worse are the laws that Isidore implemented through the Fourth Council of Toledo against people of Jewish faith that would be replicated many times over in the following centuries across the European continent. In several cases these laws became the basis for the infamous Nuremberg Laws of the Nazi regime leading to the Holocaust. These include the removal of Jewish children from their parents so that they could be raised in Christian homes, a ban on Jews holding public office and the requirement that any Jew who was coerced into converting to Christianity under the threat of death could not be allowed to revert to their Jewish faith. Isidore sought no less than to make Spain “Juden-frei,” as Hitler would attempt 1,300 years later in Germany.

Why is this ancient history relevant to separation of church and state in the U.S. today? A Catholic school in Oklahoma sought to become the first charter school funded by taxpayers to the tune of $2.7 million. The Supreme Court of Oklahoma ruled 6-2 against the school, stating “the state will be directly funding a religious school and encouraging students to attend it” in violation of the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. The school appealed the ruling to the U.S. Supreme Court and lost in a split decision, 4-4, meaning the decision of the Oklahoma court stands. The name of the school? St. Isidore of Seville Catholic Virtual School.

The irony that St. Isidore, with his connections to the long tradition of antisemitic laws of the West, should now be associated with the possible deconstruction of Thomas Jefferson’s so-named “wall of separation” does not bode well for the future of religious freedom in this country. The loss of that wall, should it fall, will not be good for church or state. Antisemitism, we must never forget, is rooted in religious belief, and especially that of my tradition. Hence Christians have the greatest responsibility to never forget. How long, if that wall comes down, before Isidore’s laws become U.S. law?

Without separation of church and state, it is more than a possibility; history suggests that it is inevitable.

What is frightening about the SCOTUS split decision is that Justice Amy Coney Barrett, widely believed to be supportive of dismantling the wall of separation, recused herself. Odds are good that it is just a matter of time before a similar case comes to the court when she will not feel the need to do so again and religious schools will then become eligible to receive direct support from the state.

So here is the problem — once the spigot of tax dollars to fund religious schools is turned on, where does it stop? Who decides which religious beliefs and traditions are taught with our tax dollars? How will taxpayers feel about funding schools that teach faith healing, speaking in tongues, polytheism, polygamy, shamanism or Shari’a Law? And will the good teachers at St. Isidore teach their students that the Jews killed Jesus as their namesake taught?

God forbid, or better, may the Supreme Court do so, at least with taxpayer dollars.

OLD DEALERSHIP GETS A MAKEOVER

Zip-O buys west Eugene showroom

A vacant former car dealership in west Eugene is being turned into offices for the growing Zip-O business, the longtime Eugene maker of specialty timbers and beams.

The family that owns Zip-O Log Mills and Zip-O Laminators bought the distinctive Sheppard Motors building at 2300 West 7th Avenue late last year and is proceeding with renovations.

The place had been empty since earlier in 2024 when Sheppard moved into its prominent newly built car dealership off North Game Farm Road in northeast Eugene, next to Interstate 5.

Zip-O, which operates two mills in Eugene and one in Goshen, has emerged as a player in the laminated beam and structural timbers market in North America.

“We have been growing over the last several years,” says CEO James Workman. The company, with about 200 workers, will centralize administrative staff at the former car dealership, he says.

Compared to the many unremarkable buildings lining West 7th entering Eugene, the 60-year-old former Sheppard building stands out, with its soaring V-shaped glass front that rises 30 feet or more.

But Zip-O’s own projects put the Sheppard building to shame. Zip-O produced the nearly 2,000 laminated beams needed for the massive exposed-wood ceiling work at the new Portland Airport terminal. Other recent projects include making 86-foot-long exposed ceiling beams for a high school gym in Alaska, and producing laminated beams up to 50 feet long for a new building at the California Institute of Technology.

The projects are all part of the nationwide trend toward using “mass timber,” thick layers of wood, in place of steel or concrete.

LISTED AT $4.4 MILLION

The October sale deed didn’t list a price for the old dealership property. But the Sheppard family, which had owned the building for years, had listed it for sale at $4.4 million. That’s about the same market value ascribed to it by the Lane County assessor.

Workman says the company paid “much less” than that.

Zip-O, 81 years old and still owned by the founding Hallstrom family, is a resilient competitor in the volatile Oregon lumber products industry.

“The company has had to reinvent itself several times,” Workman says.

In recent decades, many smaller mills have shut or been absorbed into larger corporations.

Zip-O has avoided the highly competitive market of standard two-by-four or two-by-six dimensional lumber, and instead focused on specialty products.

Zip-O opened its laminated beam mill on West 1st Avenue nine years ago.

Its West 6th Avenue mill produces custom Douglas-fir posts, beams and other specialty structural components for residential and commercial buildings, especially ones calling for exposed wood.

Zip-O also operates a planer mill and sorting yard at the former Cone Lumber mill in Goshen, south of Eugene. Zip-O bought that property for $1.55 million in 2015 as part of Cone’s bankruptcy, records show.

This fall and winter, Zip-O will remodel the former car dealership’s showroom and parts room into offices, Workman says. It hasn’t decided what to do with former repair shop space, he says. The building totals 22,000 square feet and sits on three acres.

Eugene Water and Electric Board faces lawsuit from environmental advocates

BY EVE WESTON

Environmental advocates allege in a lawsuit that the Eugene Water and Electric Board failed to implement legally required fish passage measures and instead opted for a less effective method.

Cascadia Wildlands, a local environmental nonprofit, and several other conservation groups represented by Advocates for the West and by Public Justice, filed the lawsuit in March, saying that EWEB's Trail Bridge Dam, part of the Carmen-Smith Hydroelectric Project, failed to meet standards of the Endangered Species Act.

EWEB says safety issues caused delays in the implementation of fish passage measures at the Trail Bridge Dam.

Carmen-Smith consists of three dams, two hydropower plants and three reservoirs all on the McKenzie River. The project generates enough energy to power around 16,000 homes, according to EWEB. Trail Bridge, located approximately one mile downstream from Sahalie Falls, is the farthest downstream dam of the project.

Negotiations to relicense Carmen-Smith began in 2006, and in 2008, EWEB entered a settlement to relicense operations with wildlife agencies, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), Native tribes and conservation groups.

The 2008 settlement provided several terms for renewal, including the construction of a volitional fish ladder.

In 2015, the relicensing settlement was delayed when EWEB requested an economic viability analysis and later determined that the fish ladder was too expensive. In light of the economic analysis, FERC granted EWEB an amended 40-year license in 2019 to continue operating Carmen-Smith — amending the fish passage to a non-volitional trap-and-haul system by May 2022.

The plaintiffs say that despite this change, EWEB still has failed to timely implement this crucial fish passage. "We were quite surprised to learn that even though the agencies had signed off on this much less effective plan, that EWEB still hadn't done it," says Bethany Cotton, Cascadia Wildlands conservation director.

Cotton says fish ladders are better for fish, and while more costly, they are a worthwhile investment. "It doesn't require vehicles, doesn't require human intervention and doesn't require very much maintenance," Cotton says.

In 2021, EWEB discovered sinkholes in the area near the planned trap-and-haul area. "Sinkholes can cause dam failure, which would be really catastrophic for people, property and natural resources downstream," says Aaron Orlowski, EWEB spokesperson.

However, in 2023, a seven-page declaration by a former EWEB employee alleges that EWEB staff members deliberately postponed the construction of fish passage measures as well as violating FERC license terms.

The document outlines a timeline of events alleging multiple different incidents where the project manager instructed the employee to purposefully delay implementing requirements outlined by the 2019 license.

Orlowski writes in a statement, "The concerns by the former employee stemmed from differences in approaches to project management." He writes that EWEB retained two independent law firms in 2023 to investigate the claims, and the firms found no evidence of wrongdoing. "At EWEB, physical and psychological safety is a core value," Orlowski writes. "We remain committed to fostering a workplace culture where all employees feel safe, respected and supported."

Hannah Goldblatt, attorney for Advocates of the West, says the former employee's statement provides important background information; the lawsuit focuses on EWEB's failure to implement fish passage and violation of the Endangered Species Act. "Our case was really developed based on the clear public record depicting EWEB's failure to meet the terms and conditions of its biological opinion and the fish passage articles required by its license," Goldblatt says.

Goldblatt alleges, "The dam completely blocks Chinook salmon and bull trout's ability to migrate above and below the dam which means the fish are unable to reach the important spawning and rearing habitat above the dam."

Goldblatt says that without adequate fish passage, fish are more prone to death and injury from predation and from trying to pass through the dam's turbines. EWEB was issued an "incidental take statement" by the National Marine Fisheries Service, allowing the dam to operate while causing limited harm to threatened fish species.

Goldblatt argues that the take statement "is no longer valid because EWEB has blown past all of the deadlines for permanent fish passage."

Orlowski says EWEB is committed to implementing fish passage at the dam as outlined by the licensing agreement, and the utility has conducted several habitat improvements in the area as well as constructed an interim trap-and-haul method. "We've invested more than $18 million in fish, wildlife and habitat improvements in the area, and that has also been because we haven't been able to install the permanent fish passage facility," Orlowski says.

Cotton says that despite these improvements, threatened fish species like Chinook and bull trout are still unable to effectively traverse the dam during spawning seasons. EWEB operates the interim trap-and-haul passage during wildfire season. "In two of the last three years, that highway [OR-126] has been closed at the height of the spawning season," Cotton says.

In April, EWEB's Board of Commissioners approved an additional $3.3 million to be paid to the construction company contracted to design the trap-and-haul. Cotton says, "It's frankly shocking that at this late date, in April 2025, EWEB is paying money to an engineer to design a trap-and-haul facility that was supposed to be completed years ago," Cotton says.

Goldblatt says that the ultimate goal of the lawsuit is "to see EWEB do a fish ladder at the dam, but even a new trap-and-haul facility would be an improvement.” The lawsuit also requests that if fish passage cannot be implemented in a timely way, the Trail Bridge Dam should be decommissioned and removed.

Orlowski says EWEB is disappointed that a lawsuit was filed. “When we have to spend money on hiring attorneys, customer funds ultimately pay for that,” he says.

Cotton disagrees, saying that EWEB has to be held accountable and that legal measures like the one underway are essential to ensure the survival of native fish. “I think there’s some irony in blaming conservation organizations who came to them and asked them to do the right thing for their failure to do the right thing,” Cotton says.

On May 16, EWEB filed a motion to dismiss the case on the basis that the plaintiffs have “gone to the U.S. District Court, rather than FERC, which is essentially an end run around FERC,” Orlowski says. “Courts have rejected this type of effort for decades.” In its motion, EWEB says challenges to FERC licensing decisions must go through FERC’s administrative process and appeals must be taken to the U.S. Court of Appeals, not the district court. Goldblatt says the plaintiffs disagree with EWEB’s filings and plan to oppose the motion because they are not challenging the FERC license itself — but instead claiming EWEB violated the ESA by failing to complete fish passage required by the license.

Orlowski says EWEB is still working hard to implement fish passage at the Trail Bridge Dam. “It is now possible to move forward with installing the fish passage, and we’re doing that as fast as we can,” he says.

On the same day, May 16, the plaintiffs filed a preliminary injunction that, if approved, would force EWEB to make immediate improvements to its trap-and-haul system. “We don’t want there to be another spawning season where no fish pass the dam,” Cotton says.

Judge Mustafa T. Kasubhai has scheduled in-person oral arguments on the motion to dismiss for June 30.

Cotton says despite the challenges associated with implementing effective fish passage, she’s hopeful her nephew can see a future where fish are able to pass the Carmen-Smith hydroelectric project unimpeded. “I want him, when he’s my age, to be able to see spring Chinook salmon and bull trout in the wild. And that’s not going to happen if we don’t address the main causes of harm to these species,” Cotton says.

LAST CALL THIS SEASON AT PICCADILLY

Eugene’s longest-running flea market wraps up its season June 8 and returns this fall

BY KAT TABOR

Piccadilly Flea Market remains a go-to destination for vintage treasures, handcrafted goods, local music and community connection — all housed in the Lane County Fairgrounds’ Exhibition Halls during its September-to-June run. With affordable admission, a festive atmosphere and more than 50 years of history, the market has become a fixture in Eugene’s cultural calendar.

The final market of the season takes place Sunday, June 8, with events set to resume in September.

Visitors are welcomed outside by the smell of espresso from the Most Wanted Coffee cart, then step inside to browse rows of vendor booths offering everything from antique tools to handmade jewelry. Local bands — the genre-blending Never Ever Band played in May — provide live music throughout the day. Shoppers are encouraged to bring cash, though an ATM is available at the entrance.

Owner Gwen Free, who took over operations in 2019, said interest in the market has surged since pandemic shutdowns. Free reflects on how COVID made the community miss Piccadilly more and had even larger crowds even before the shutdown. “We are two full seasons back since COVID, and our market grew while we were down,” Free says. “We have more sellers and more shoppers than we did before — by a lot. And so many more young people.”

Among the longtime vendors is Paul Wood, a freelance photographer who has sold vintage cameras and pop culture collectables at Piccadilly for more than a decade. “The people are my favorite part,” he says.

Many booths have been passed down through generations, adding to the market’s multigenerational charm and community spirit.

Vendor spaces start at $32 with a table, tablecloth and chair, or $20 for floor space only. Discounts are available for booking multiple dates. Reservations can be made in person or by calling 541-683-5589.

Piccadilly Flea Market is held monthly from September through June at the Lane County Fairgrounds’ Exhibition Halls, 796 West 13th Avenue. Early bird admission begins at 8 am for $7.50, and general admission starts at 10 am for $1.50. The market closes at 3 pm. For more information, visit PiccadillyFlea.com or email piccadillyflea@gmail.com.

BY EW EDITORIAL STAFF

>> Walking in, you immediately notice the shelves of beef jerky, candy and chips where natural, local snacks once lay. SeQuential, the popular “hippie” gas station on McVay Highway, was sold to JSK Eugene, LLC on April 25. The good news is that SeQuential’s famous SQHub café and kombucha on tap will remain, as will some of those natural products. A post on its website, SQBiofuels.com, says, “After all these years, it has come time for us to close the SeQuential Retail business and say goodbye. To our customers, vendors, friends and SQ Hub team members — thank you!” EW reached out to Jose Jimenez, new manager, who says, “A lot of the healthier stuff is staying, but I’m trying to get rid of all the stuff that wasn’t selling and bring in a lot more product.” SeQuential opened in 2006 and since then has provided the community with its alternative fuels and natural products, and EW has reached out to the previous owners to confirm if the station will be a 76. EW reported on a previous transition in 2023 when Neste, a Finnish company, acquired the used cooking oil collection business that was a part of Crimson Renewable Energy Holdings, which included SeQuential Environmental Services.

>> Welcome to yet another edition of “the little paper that could.” First, did you celebrate Eugene Weekly Day? We did! Eugene Mayor Kaarin Knudson proclaimed May 30 as Eugene Weekly Day — and encouraged “all community members to join me in celebrating their many issues and contributions to the fabric and future of Eugene.” We were touched and delighted — and even more so because longtime EW owner Anita Johnson joined local lights and luminaries in the City Club of Eugene’s Order of the Turtle, awarded posthumously to folks who have “stuck their neck out.” She joined Dallas Boggs, Nancie Fadeley, David “Frog” Miller, Marshall Peter, Lyllye Reynolds-Parker and Nancy Webber. Johnson also was honored with a Turtle Award while alive, and this year’s honorees were Sharon Posner, Paul Solomon and Oblio Stroyman. And because May 30 was our new favorite day, the ups and downs of the extradition case in the EW embezzlement was the front page of The Register-Guard that day!

>> Ready for more cheers? As long as we are celebrating, we also learned this week that Eugene Weekly won six regional Society of Professional Journalists awards in the medium newsroom category (full disclosure: we are pretty sure we are a small newsroom, but hell, we’ll compete against the bigger kids). Editor Camilla Mortensen took first in editorial commentary for “Stung — What Happened to the Damn Paper,” on the embezzlement. Former intern Eliza Aronson had two first places in investigative reporting and series for “F is for Failure,” her series on the University of Oregon’s handling of roofie incidents at frat parties. She also placed in the top three in the country in the large school division for in-depth reporting in the SPJ Mark of Excellence collegiate contest for the same series. EW’s graphics and production manager McKenzie Young-Roy won a regional SPJ first for her cover illustration for one of the roofie stories, “Report No Evil.” UO’s Catalyst Journalism Project scored two wins — students beating full-time professional journalists — in education reporting. Sophia Cossette and Tristin Hoffman took first for education coverage with their 4J/Andy Dey investigation, and Emily Rogers and Bentley Freeman won in poverty and homelessness reporting for their story, “Unhoused and Unwelcome,” on the dismantling of a homeless camp in Cottage Grove.

>> Have you checked out the Native American Arts & Crafts Makers Market? It’s the first Sunday of the month March through December at the Eugene Farmers Market Pavilion. We stopped by June 1, and it’s worth a visit if you haven’t been, from the arts and handicrafts to the music and dancing (and even some dancing instruction!). Native and Indigenous artists present and sell their arts, crafts, jewelry, clothing, beadwork and more. Find out more at NAACM.org. And for art lovers, in the meantime, don’t forget to check out the Eugene ArtWalk this Friday, June 6!

>> This week in news updates: Online at EugeneWeekly.com you can find several guest viewpoints on the Legislature. Eugene 4J School Board member Judy Newman writes in support of Senate Bill 1167, The Child Success Act, and Rep. Nancy Nathanson and Anne Harthman of Broadway Apothecary discuss Eugene and Oregon’s pharmacy crisis and House Bill 3212. Check out the RG’s update on Gov. Tina Kotek’s decision not to extradite a suspect in the burglaries targeting Asian families in Eugene. And KLCC (and everybody else) is updating on just how freaking high the grass pollen count is this year. KLCC notes that on June 2 the count was 890, and anything above 200 particles per cubic meter of air is considered very high. Gesundheit!

Eugene Weekly's SUMMER GUIDE

From fireworks and parades in the hot sun to family storytimes in the cool of the library, summer in Oregon is that unique mixture of too much to do, time to relax and maybe a little wildfire smoke thrown in for flavor. No matter how you plan to spend your summer, we've compiled four months worth of events for your perusal. No vacation time? No problem! There's live music in the evenings, theater performances and more. If you're curious about all there is to do near and far here in Oregon — look no further than EW's Summer Guide listings!

Raptors, wine and summer nights? Yes, please! Cascades Raptor Center brings back its beloved Night at the Raptor Center series — an after-hours experience where guests can sip, snack and come face-to-beak with some of Oregon's most awe-inspiring birds of prey. The event runs on select summer Thursdays (June 13 and 27; July 11 and 25; and August 8 and 22) from 6 pm to 8 pm. Executive Director Maddy Broedel, who took on her current role in 2022 after nearly a decade with the center, says the popular series has become a staple of the season. "It is our most popular event — we keep bringing it back year after year," she says. "If we can find something that sparks interest, people will return even if they came last year or the year before." Broedel promises new surprises this summer to keep things fresh. "We just try to shake it up a little," she says. "We always try to make it something new every single year." Tickets are $50 per person and include food, beverages and access to the event. "Those funds go directly towards our work," Broedel says. That includes the nonprofit's ongoing efforts to rehabilitate orphaned and injured raptors in their wildlife hospital. While the event is open to all ages, it's designed with grownups in mind. Ninkasi Brewing is the beer sponsor for the season, and a rotating cast of local wineries will be featured at each event. "Guests can expect to get up close and personal with birds of prey," Broedel says. "Guests will be able to learn about our feathered friends in a fun and relaxed setting." — Kat Tabor Night at the Raptor Center is 6 pm to 8 pm June 13 and 27; July 11 and 25; and August 8 and 22 at Cascades Raptor Center, 32275 Fox Hollow Road. Tickets are $50, and proceeds support the care of injured and orphaned raptors. Learn more at CascadesRaptorCenter.org.

If you’re driving past the McKenzie River Community Track late June and hear the whirring of chainsaws, it’s not loggers you’re listening to — it’s artists. The McKenzie River Solstice Arts Festival in Vida features many Oregon-based artists, including a live demonstration by Cottage Grove chainsaw artist Brittny Hughes. Heather Greene, the festival’s event director and designer, says that while this is the first iteration of the McKenzie River Solstice Arts Festival, she’s hopeful it becomes an annual event. “We hope to support more artists and performers each year,” she says. “The goal is to honor our connection to each other, community and exhibit and explore the many ways we can express ourselves creatively while enjoying some laughter and dancing along the beautiful McKenzie River.” The two-day festival invites experienced and new artists — including young artists — to sell their works. Greene says there will be a youth arts booth, where kids 12 and under can sign up for free to sell their own creations in a two-hour time slot. No festival is complete without live entertainment, and the McKenzie River Solstice Arts Festival boasts a mix of music, comedy, dance and more. Performances begin at 11:30 am each day and go late into the night, either at the main stage or the unplugged sundial stage. The sundial is an “interactive center at the festival,” Greene says, that the Lane Arts Council and McKenzie schools have put together to “engage youth and the young at heart.” There is something for everyone this Summer Solstice, Greene says, and “we are certain this will become a yearly favorite for community members and visitors to the McKenzie River Valley.” — Emma J Nelson

The McKenzie River Solstice Arts Festival is 10 am to 7 pm Saturday, June 21, and 10 am to 6 pm Sunday, June 22, at the McKenzie Community Track & Field, 51326 Blue River Drive, Vida. Individual adult single-day passes are $15, and two-day passes are $25. Family passes, which include five people, are $35 for a single day and $60 for two days. Children under 13 and seniors over 65 enter FREE.

DIVA SIMONE SLAUGHTER AND DAPHNE BERTHA STORM

For the first time in Eugene’s 31 years of celebrating the local LGBTQ+ community, the Eugene Pride Festival will be fenced off and made safe for all participants at the Lane Events Center. After a hate group interrupted the event last year, the Pride Day Equality Project made the event ticketed and implemented a clear bag policy to make the festival a private event and aid in providing safety throughout the celebration. While the event is ticketed, organizers say they will ensure that nobody will be turned away who wants to participate. Usually thrown in the second weekend of August, the event was moved to the last weekend of June to celebrate the festival during Pride month. Last year, over 12,000 people attended the festival, growing exponentially every year since 2021, when Eugene was one of the only cities that hosted a Pride celebration despite the pandemic. This year, there are around 200 booths, a raffle and three stages scattered both inside and outside the fairgrounds that will showcase drag queens, musicians, comedians, dancers, puppeteers and other performers. The event will also feature a kids zone, a clothing swap, gender affirming haircuts, a beer garden, a pet zone and a space where people can celebrate Pride while maintaining their sobriety and building support networks. Alex Holmes, a volunteer coordinator with Eugene Pride, says, “I’ve been to Prides up and down the West Coast, but I think Eugene Pride is unique in that we really do a really good job of making sure the whole community comes together in one space.” Holmes adds, “Eugene has this unique vibe of being open to everyone in the community, and I think that’s what makes us kind of one of the better prides on the West Coast.” Before the Pride festi-val starts, the Equality Rally will be held downtown at Kesey Square at 9 am, followed by a march to the Lane Events Center for the rest of the event. Once the family-friendly festivities come to a close, there will be a 21-plus afterparty.

— Samantha Sobel

The Eugene Pride Festival is 11 am to 7 pm Saturday, June 28, at Lane Events Center, 796 West 13th Avenue. Admission is on a sliding scale from $1 to $20, but no one will be turned away for lack of funds.

This summer in Lane County there are many reasons for a parade — Pride, the Fourth of July, blackberries, illuminated human- and electric-powered art, and plenty more. Throughout the summer refer back to this guide on where to get your parade on! June 28 is Eugene's Pride event, which will begin with a rally and march at 9 am from Kesey Square to the Eugene Pride Festival at the Lane Events Center. The march is just over a mile and will lead to the Pride festivities, which include live entertainment, food and drinks, family activities and local vendors. There are multiple Fourth of July events to attend this year from Eugene to Florence. Downtown Creswell will be holding its annual Fourth of July parade on North 4th Street and West A Street, Holt Park and surrounding areas all day. Prior to the parade there will be a pancake breakfast, so get there early to put down a chair and grab some flapjacks. Harrisburg will be holding a Fourth of July parade starting on 7th and Smith Street and ending at the high school. This year's theme is Peace, Love and Fireworks. Individuals can register to participate in the parade for $5. If you are a child or from a school in the area the fee is waived. The following day there will also be a pet and costume parade at the riverfront. Bohemia Mining Days, the celebration of discovering gold in Cottage Grove, is July 17 to July 19. Throughout the weekend, BMD features food vendors, activities, attractions and a town parade. The parade is July 19 from South 10th Street to Main Street and to Gateway Boulevard of Cottage Grove. For jam lovers, Blackberry Jam Festival is in Lowell July 25 to July 27. The accompanying parade is Saturday, July 26, and people can enroll to have a float in the parade by July 15. From August 14 to August 17, Junction City will celebrate its annual Scandinavian Festival. The festival commences with a processional parade to the festival park stage complete with traditional dance performances. Last but not least, the city of Eugene will be aglow September 27 for the Eugene BRIGHT Parade. The parade is a night of walking art as parade performers deck themselves out in lights and colorful costumes. — Emily Rogers

Have you walked, pedaled or driven around Eugene just to see the art pieces emblazoned on the walls? The city of Eugene invites you to be a tourist in your own town with its Downtown Mural Bike Tour Thursday, July 17, led by Debbie Williamson. Williamson, the University of Oregon Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art communications manager, has always been a lover of the arts, and the JSMA is the art museum she’d visit as a child. “I grew up in Eugene, and I have very strong core memories of how my shoes click-clacked on the stairs when I walked up,” she says. “I felt like a princess.” The art pieces and murals around the city, particularly those from the 20x21 EUG Mural Project — a city of Eugene Cultural Services Public Art Program initiative to create 20 public murals around Eugene by 2021, of which Williamson was a committee member — are also near and dear to her heart. “Public art is like a museum you don’t have to pay admission for,” she says. “It’s essential to a community to have vibrant public art, to walk into a parking garage and encounter a poem, to walk down a city sidewalk and see a sculpture or a little tile piece.” Williamson has only led walking tours of the local murals in the past, but biking will allow cyclists to go see murals in harder-to-reach places, she says. The Alexis Diaz mural on the side of Wildtime Foods (1061 West 2nd Avenue) is one of her favorites. “It’s a large mural of mammoths, and it was all painted with a little jar of Sumi ink and a brush that’s the size of two of your fingers together,” Williamson says. “He painted it with just little brush strokes. It’s a master class in mark making, and I don’t get to talk about it very often.” Jenette Kime, Eugene’s transportation options coordinator, will do the biking on Williamson’s behalf, almost like a bicycle rickshaw situation. Kime has always loved biking, she says, but grew up seeing it as a form of recreation rather than transportation. “It’s fun to do these kinds of events that are really easy for people to have an early entry into that kind of topic,” Kime says. While Kime pedals, Williamson will regale the cyclists with stories of the different murals and local art pieces. — Emma J Nelson

The Downtown Mural Bike Tour is 10 am Thursday, July 17, and begins at Campbell Community Center, 155 High Street. Tickets are $5 for Eugene residents, $6 for non-residents. Bring your own bicycle or ride a PeaceHealth Rides bike.

July in Oregon is more than just hot weather and fireworks, it's also peak blueberry season. Head over to Adkins Blueberry Farm on July 19 for the 14th annual Blues and Brews Festival to experience an exciting start to Oregon's blueberry season. Starting at 10 am, enjoy local music, food carts, kids activities, craft vendors and more, including an appearance from Cesar the No Drama Llama. Local music will be performed throughout the day by Bradley Shepard's Perfect Flavor, Loose Ends and Donny Raye and the Blues Foundation. Pies and other items will be available for auction as well. The festival is a benefit for Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA) of Lane County, a nonprofit organization that trains volunteers to advocate for children in foster care. Adkins Blueberry Farm owners, Bryce and Erron Mertz, say CASA is "very near and dear" to their hearts, as two of their own children were adopted from foster care and had a court-appointed special advocate. "The farm is an amazing place and we are grateful to have an opportunity to give back," Bryce Mertz says. — Bailey Meyers

The Blues and Brews Festival is 10 am Saturday, July 19, at Adkins Blueberry Farm, 85995 Gossler Road. Admission is free with an optional donation to CASA of Lane County. Carpooling is recommended as parking is limited.

SEPTEMBER 13-14

Every summer, Radical Alternative Development, or RAD, hosts a mental health awareness benefit punk show. The show, hosted at Washington Jefferson Park, is meant to bring the community together and give the people who need it most a sense of belonging. “We’re just trying to provide the next generation with the community that we needed when we were younger that wasn’t there,” RAD founder BriJit Jenkins says. RAD was founded during the 2020 pandemic when longtime punk fans got together to create an official organization that serves as a distributor of resources, education and community. Jenkins says the founders saw a need for something like RAD when the suicide rate spiked. “We were like, we have to do something about this because a lot of the people who were taking their lives are very underserved, especially in an alternative subculture,” Jenkins says. RAD gets funding mainly from the community but also received a grant this year from the city of Eugene, Jenkins says, which is an instrumental part of hosting the Washington-Jefferson show. Jenkins says RAD received around 70 percent less funding this year and blames the current presidential administration. Despite this, RAD is hosting one of its biggest mental health awareness benefits ever, this year taking place both Saturday and Sunday from noon to 10 pm. “We’re still going to do it bigger this year, because we take care of us and we’re raising the money ourselves,” Jenkins says. RAD’s longtime goal is to keep giving back to the community through its shows, fundraisers and events. As a licensed mental health professional, Jenkins says she hopes for a future where mental health and social services are more accessible and inclusive. “We need more mutual aid,” she says. “If people want to feel valued, heard and a part of something, they need to be more than just, ‘Oh, make sure that I’m paying you money first.’” The mental health awareness benefit will include performances by bands such as Haggis, Dry Socket, Aggro, Weapons World, Prager Youth and Triangle Fire. — Eve Weston RAD's Mental Health Awareness Benefit Punk Show is noon to 10 pm Saturday, Sept. 13, and Sunday, Sept. 14, at Washington Jefferson Park. The event is all ages and free.

what's happening

JUNE 8

If there is one thing that really makes the world go 'round, it's vintage shopping. That's why Founded, one of Eugene's premiere vintage stores, is kicking off summer the right way with its first ever Founded Fest. Partnering with Eugene's Waste Prevention Program, Founded Fest is not your grandma's flea market. In the Farmers Market Pavilion on June 8, flocks of vintage sellers will magically appear, selling clothes from the summer of love and beyond, up to the Y2K, with the types of finds that just make your heart happy. Because this is Eugene, a city that breathes through its art, the market will also host plenty of local artists and artisans to bring in the colors of the summer. Five local bands, a sustainable fashion show featuring six local designers and a dance performance by Fermata Dance Collective will provide the backdrop throughout the day for this shop-till-you-drop experience. The Fix-it-Fair will show up as well, doing free repairs on clothing, leather and jewelry from 1 pm to 4 pm. Of course, plenty of food and alcohol vendors will be there providing the grub to keep the party going all day long. "This event is a quintessential showcase of Eugene's vibrant arts, culture and our ever-growing vintage scene," Founded owner Peter Michaels says. "This event only happens once a year, don't miss it!" — Savannah Brown on June 8, a collaborative event between Whiteaker Printmakers, Wildling Collaborative Arts and Clay Space, neighboring arts organizations in the Whiteaker neighborhood. The festival also celebrates Clay Space's recent nonprofit status, and reaches beyond the clay arts: Wildling Collaborative Arts also provides textile, stained glass and block printing resources. Whiteaker Printmakers is a member-supported community printmaking studio. Deb Babcock is a Clay Space volunteer who chairs the event planning committee, along with representatives from Wildling and Whiteaker Printmakers. "It's going to be lively," Babcock says, with 50 artist booths showcasing their work, live music, a food truck, pottery wheels and demonstrations, "so people can watch people throwing on the wheel," she says. For kids, she adds, there will be a tent for them to make pottery, with a special kiln so they can take something home with them that day. Clay Space membership, Babcock says, provides access to studio space, wheels, tables, glazes and firings. As a new nonprofit, Babcock says the group hopes to reach out to people with disabilities interested in working with clay, collaborate with other nonprofits and contribute to causes like FOOD For Lane County's Empty Bowls Dinner & Auction. Purchasing at Second Avenue Arts Fest, Babcock says, will support "local artists and made-in-America products," and it's the week before Father's Day, so the perfect opportunity to pick up a new mug for dad. "Bring the whole family and just have fun," Babcock says. — Will Kennedy

Eugene's ceramic arts scene steps forward with the Second Avenue Arts Fest

The Second Avenue Arts Fest is 11 am to 5 p.m Sunday June 8 at Clay Space, 222 Polk Street. Free.

JUNE 8-9

This was not the way the season was supposed to end for Chamber Music Amici. The ensemble's June 8 and 9 concerts were originally planned as celebratory affairs to honor Sharon Schuman, the deeply respected violinist and a force in the community who worked extensively as a treasurer for SquareOne Villages and to raise money for the Fanconi Anemia Research Fund. She also was a retired educator who taught English at the University of Oregon. These were to be Schuman's final concerts before leaving the music stage. Instead, on April 23, Schuman was killed while running on the Amazon trail in south Eugene when a motorist lost control of his vehicle. She was 79. Now, Chamber Music Amici has announced the program — Suk and Dvořák — will serve as a memorial marking her musical legacy, including as Amici's founding artistic director for more than a decade, starting in 2009. Schuman was known for her expressive playing and thoughtful programming. She also performed with the Oregon Bach Festival and the Oregon Mozart Players, among others. The Suk and Dvořák program has Josef Suk's Piano Quartet in A Minor and Antonín Dvořák's Piano Quintet No. 2 in A Major. — Dan Buckwalter

Chamber Music Amici performs Suk and Dvořák 3 pm Sunday, June 8, and 7:30 pm Monday, June 9, at Wildish Theater, 630 Main Street, Springfield. Ticket prices range from $35 to $47 and can be purchased at WildishTheater.com.

HIKING

SUMMER WILDFLOWERS

Find early blooms on a hike to Tire Mountain

BY WILLIAM L. SULLIVAN

If you're eager to get a head start on summer in the Cascades, stroll through the wildflower meadows of Tire Mountain, an often overlooked peak near Oakridge where the blooms of summer arrive by early June. The easy path contours two miles through sunny meadows with views of Cascade snowpeaks. Then the trail climbs through forest to Tire Mountain's former lookout site.

The first 1.2 miles of the route is popular with mountain bikers, who then peel off to the left and zoom down the steep Alpine Trail to Westfir. Although bicycles are allowed on the rest of the Tire Mountain Trail, hikers pretty much have the meadows there to themselves.

To find the trailhead, drive Interstate 5 just south of Eugene, take exit 188A, and follow Willamette Highway 58 east for 30 miles, almost to Oakridge. Opposite the Middle Fork Ranger Station, veer left at the Westfir exit for 0.3 miles. At a T-shaped junction just beyond a bridge, turn left toward Westfir for 1.8 miles to a stop sign beside a covered bridge. Continue straight 4.5 miles on paved Aufderheide Road 19, turn left on National Forest Road 1912, a gravel road, for 6.8 steep, winding miles to Windy Pass, go straight onto road 1910 for 0.3 miles, and finally fork right onto road 1911 for another 0.4 miles to the "Alpine Trail" sign on the left.

No parking permit is required. Space can be a little tight, with cars left by both hikers and bikers.

After a few hundred yards through second-growth woods, the trail enters a lovely old-growth forest packed with woodland blooms. Look for twin fairy bells, pink bleeding hearts, yellow wood violets and five petaled candy-flowers. In another half mile the path traverses the first of a series of steep meadows. Diamond Peak dominates the skyline to the right, while Mount Bachelor and two of the Three Sisters cluster to the left. Below are Hills Creek Reservoir and the oak-dotted ridges of Oakridge, surrounded by clearcuts.

At the 1.2-mile mark, keep right at a trail junction in a summer patch of tall purple larkspur. The path ducks into the forest for half a mile and crosses two small meadows before emerging at the last and largest field, a slope that is covered each June by a carpet of tiny pink plectritis wildflowers.

If you've ever read the Dr. Seuss book Horton Hears a Who!, you'll recognize plectritis as a probable model for the book's seemingly endless fields of pink, ball-shaped flowers. In the children's book, Horton the elephant discovers an entire civilization of tiny Whos on one of the tiny flowers, but then loses it amidst the rest.

Amidst this plectritis field you can also expect to see yellow monkey-flower, sunflower-like balsamroot and blue camas.

If you're tired, turn back at this final meadow. Otherwise, follow the virtually level path 1.1 miles through the woods to a trail junction on the slope of Tire Mountain. Take the uphill, left-hand fork, switchbacking to the broad, brushy summit. A few boards remain from the lookout tower that once stood here. The lookout was an early, simple design, a platform built atop a cut-off tree trunk in the middle of the summit field.

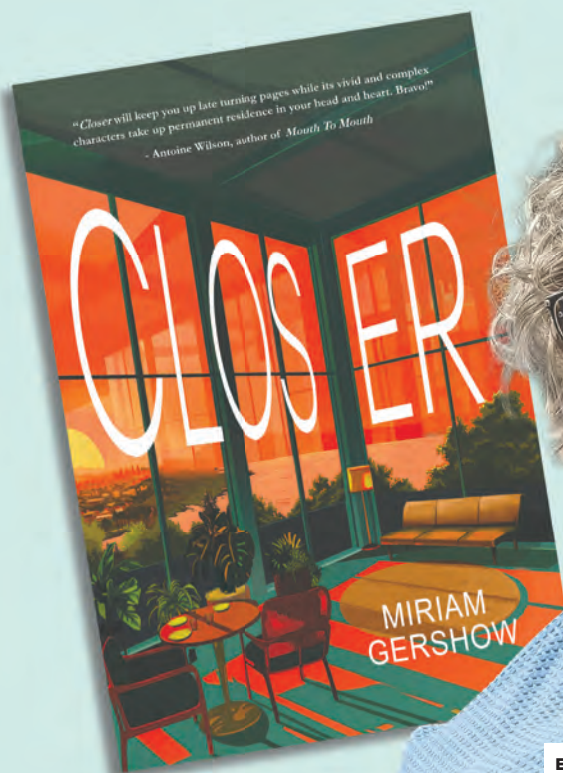

Trees now block much of the view from the summit, but a trip to Tire Mountain isn't about conquering a peak. It's about reveling in the glories of summer in the Cascades.

William L. Sullivan is the author of 23 books, including The Ship In The Woods and the updated 100 Hikes Series For Oregon. Learn more at OregonHiking.com.

EUGENE AUTHOR MIRIAM GERSHOW PUBLISHES HER SECOND NOVEL, CLOSER, IN EARLY JUNE.

Eugene author Miriam Gershow takes a different path to publication for her second novel

BY ESTER BARKAI

Miriam Gershow's second novel Closer is coming out the first week of June, 15 years after her first novel The Local News was published. To celebrate, she will have a reading and conversation about the story with her longtime writing group colleague Debra Gwartney on June 7 from 3 pm to 5 pm at Wordcrafters, a nonprofit writing organization in Eugene where she has served on the board for the past year.

Gershow is leaving her position at Wordcrafters, though, to join the board of the Eugene Public Library. Concerned about the trend of book banning, she says that libraries are on the front lines and feels an urgency to step up to "protect the future of free reading."

On June 28, too, from 3 pm to 5 pm, she will be one of three local writers reading from their novels and taking questions at J. Michaels Books in downtown Eugene. The other two authors are Scott Nadelson and Nancy Townsley. All three authors have written stories set in Oregon.

Both of Gershow's novels feature young adults, but she doesn't necessarily consider that a theme. She doesn't think about themes when she writes, she says. What interests her most are the bad decisions that people make, like those in Closer, starting with some sounds a couple of white students make at a Black student in the high school library.

Though the students might not have meant their action to amount to anything more than a silly joke, the racially charged incident ignites a chain reaction that moves through the school and beyond into the community.

In a town not unlike Eugene, during Donald Trump's first presidential candidacy and with Barack Obama still in office, worried citizens nevertheless carry on with life as if there isn't anything to worry about. In other words, they take the attitude "nothing to see here." All the while a tension lies just beneath the surface, which Gershow establishes at the start describing the school's culture with a geology metaphor where people's differences are set in stone.

"Students existed in strata at West," she writes, "though most of the time the striations weren't so apparent. Normally, they had the sense to quietly self-segregate."

Gershow and I meet on a rare day in spring when it's not raining in Eugene. Sitting in her backyard with the sun out and flowers in full bloom, she says, "It's every writer's dream to be published by one of the Big Five."

She's referring to publishing companies like Random House, for example, who printed her first novel. It was amazing seeing her book in all the stores, she recalls, and to have it reviewed in The New York Times.

Those big publishers require big performances, though, and her relationship with Random House, more specifically with Strauss & Giroux, then an imprint of Random House, came to an end. As did eventually a partnership with her agent. They parted on good terms. Her agent, who is also an artist, still sends her homemade cards at Christmas time.

Agents can often be the only path to getting a work published. The large publishing houses mostly do not accept submissions from authors. But shortly after Gershow's relationship with her agent ended, she heard from two smaller independent publishers: Propeller Books in Portland and Regal House in North Carolina.

Dan DeWeese, publisher of Propeller Books, says Gershow was on his radar as a local author who was positively reviewed in The New York Times, and for being a finalist for the Oregon Book Award in 2009. He had read some of her short stories, too, and said they were "smart, funny, surprising... everything you want from a good story."

Last year Propeller Books published Survival Tips, a collection of 10 short stories by Gershow which was nominated for an Oregon Book Award.

Regal House contacted Gershow after she submitted her novel Closer to them via their online process, which does not require an agent.

Given that she's now had two books published in the last two years, I ask if a writer needs a literary agent at all, as is common wisdom.

"It depends on what you want," she answers. "There are a lot of ways to be a writer."

Miriam Gershow will have a reading and conversation about Closer with author Debra Gwartney at 3 pm June 7 at Wordcrafters, 436 Charnelton Street, suite 100. And at 3 pm, June 28, Gershow and fellow Oregon writers Scott Nadelson and Nancy Townsley will read from their novels and take questions at J. Michaels Books, 160 East Broadway.

SAVAGE Love

BY DAN SAVAGE

Quickies

1. Queer boy in an open relationship here with a silly question. I've started seeing someone recently. They're cute and I enjoy their company, but they use a lot of cologne and it's really hurting my desire to be physical with them. I don't know this person well and the trajectory we've been on has been towards a friends-with-benefits sort of situation at best, so I'm not sure what I owe them here. Should I say something or back away?

Asking someone to use less cologne is like asking someone to use less cocaine: they're going to react defensively, deny using too much, and accuse you of being the one with a problem. So, unless this person is someone you're hoping to get serious about — and it doesn't sound like they are — it's not worth it.

2. I need a girl in my life.

Good luck with that.

3. Is it unethical to preemptively block people on Grindr who I know I would never consider fucking?

A man gets on Grindr because he's looking for dick and/or ass right now — and if your dick and/or ass isn't available to him, blocking him is a courtesy, as it frees up room on his grid for guys whose dicks and/or asses are available.

4. What book do you recommend for someone just beginning to explore the Dom/sub relationship?

I would recommend Playing Well with Others by Lee Harrington and Mollena Williams, both volumes of The Funny Dom's Guide to Kink by The Funny Dom, and Dossie Easton and Janet Hardy's The New Topping Book and The New Bottoming Book. You could also follow — and learn a lot from — the Lina “Ask a Sub” Dune, who hosts a podcast and writes a newsletter (where you can find her terrific advice columns), and Alesandra of Dom/Sub Living, who blogs, memes and teaches courses on Dom/sub relationships.

5. I am a (mostly? formerly?) straight man in a blue city in Texas. Six years ago, I got Peyronie's disease, which contributed to the dissolution of my marriage. It has been rough — xiaflex treatments, a hematoma that only three percent get, an ER visit, delays — but I finally got surgery and a month later was cleared for sexual activity after a checkup. But since that day my sexuality and kinks have been changing every day. One day Latinas, one day short girls, one day girls into impact play. Then a 5'1” femboy messaged me on Reddit about being my sub.

So, where do I find these short and feminine adult boys that are into Daddies? I feel like I can finally be honest about my wants and needs without shame now.

You can meet plenty of people who claim to be 5'1” femboys on the Internet — they're all over Reddit, they're all over hookup apps, they're even on Instagram fixing cars and on Twitter making swords — and while some of the femboys on Reddit and hookup apps might be who they claim to be and willing to meet up with a hot daddy, some are probably 6'2” masculine dudes or 5'2” cis women who fantasize about being femboys and won't want to meet up with you in real life.

6. I “safeworded” out of a kink scene and my Dom pouted for two days. Is that a red flag?

Doms who pout after subs use a safeword want their subs to hesitate to use their safewords in future scenes — which is a definite red flag. Basically, any Dom who responds to the use of a safeword with anything other than an expression of genuine concern, an openness to constructive feedback, and an immediate offer of ice cream isn't a Dom you want to see again.

7. I have always been aroused by the idea of watching two men make love to each other. Not porn fucking, but two men who adore each other. I don't necessarily need to be invited to join, but it would be pretty amazing. How should I safely ask for this? (I am queer AFAB.) How can I find a couple to date in this fantasy? Life is short, and I'd like to live it.

Seeing as the ultimate version of your fantasy involves being invited to join in — be honest: you wanna watch for a while, then wind up in a pile — you should seek out bisexual guys who are into each other and into you.

8. My boyfriend's ultimate fantasy is “forced bi,” which is literally the only kind of porn he masturbates to. I feel like a hypocrite because I'm a bisexual woman who isn't attracted to bisexual men at all and I don't want to “make” my boyfriend give some guy a blowjob. Am I a hypocrite? Are we doomed?

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S

FREE WILL Astrology

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have had resemblances to cactuses in recent days. It hasn't always been pleasant and cheerful, but you have become pretty skilled at surviving, even thriving, despite an insufficiency of juicy experiences. Fortunately, the emotional fuel you had previously stored up has sustained you, keeping you resilient and reasonably fluid. However, this situation will soon change. More succulence is on its way. Scarcity will end, and you will be blessed with an enhanced flow of lush feelings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): I foresee abundance emerging from modest sources. I predict breakthroughs arising out of your loving attention to the details of the routine. So please don't get distracted by poignant meditations on what you feel is missing from your life. Don't fantasize about what you wish you could be doing instead of what you are actually doing. Your real wealth lies in the small tasks that are right in front of you — even though they may not yet have revealed their full meaning or richness. I invite you and encourage you to be alert for grandeur in seemingly mundane intimate moments.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): It's time for your Uncle Rob to offer you some fundamental advice for living. These tips are always worthy of your contemplation, but especially now. Ready? Being poised amidst uncertainty is a superpower. You may attract wonders and blessings if you can function well while dealing with contradictory feelings, unclear situations and incomplete answers. Don't rush to artificial closure when patience with the unfinished state will serve you better. Be willing to address just part of a problem rather than trying to insist on total resolution. There's no need to be worried or frustrated if some enigmas cannot yet be explained and resolved. Enjoy the mystery!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Acclaimed Cancerian poet Lucille Clifton published 14 books and mothered six children. That heroism seems almost impossible. Having helped raise one child myself, I know how consuming it is to be a parent. Where did she find the time and energy to generate so much great literature? Judging from the astrological omens, I suspect you now have access to high levels of productivity comparable to Clifton's. Like her, you will also be able to gracefully juggle competing demands and navigate adeptly through different domains. Here's my favorite part: Your stellar efficiency will stem not from stressfully trying too hard but rather from good timing and a nimble touch.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): One of the seven wonders of the ancient world was the Colossus of Rhodes, located on a Greek island. Symbolizing power and triumph, it was a towering statue dedicated to the sun god Helios. The immediate motivation for its construction was the local people's defeat of an invading army. I hereby authorize you to acquire or create your own personal version of an inspiring icon like the Colossus, Leo. It will symbolize the fact that the coming months will stimulate lavish expressions of your leonine power. It will help inspire you to showcase your talents and make bold moves. PS: Be alert for chances to mobilize others with your leadership. Your natural brilliance will be a beacon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The Great Barrier Reef is the world's biggest structure built by living things. Lying beneath the Coral Sea off the east coast of Australia, it's made by billions of small organisms, coral polyps, all working together to create a magnificent home for a vast diversity of life forms. Let's make the Great Barrier Reef your symbol of power for the next 10 months, Virgo. I hope it inspires you to manage and harness the many details that together will generate a robust source of vitality for your tribe, family, and community.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): One of my favorite poets, Arthur Rimbaud, wrote all of his brilliant work before he became an adult. I suspect that no matter what your age is, many of you Libras are now in an ultra-precocious phase with some resemblances to Rimbaud from age 16 to 21. The downside of this situation is that you may be too advanced for people to thoroughly understand you. You could be ahead of your time and too cool for even the trendsetters. I urge you to trust your farseeing visions and forward-looking intuitions even if others can't appreciate them yet. What you bring to us from the future will benefit us all.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Blacksmiths still exist. They were more common in the past, but there are many 21st-century practitioners. It's a demanding art, requiring intense heat to soften hard slabs of metal so they can be forged into intricate new shapes. The process requires both fire and finesse. I think you are currently in a phase when blacksmithing is an apt metaphor. You will need to artfully interweave passion and precision. Fiery ambition or intense feelings may arise, offering you raw energy for transformation. To harness it effectively, you must temper your approach with patience, restraint and detail-oriented focus.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Jean-Paul Sartre and Simon de Beauvoir were two feisty, independent, strong-minded French writers. Beauvoir was a trailblazing feminist, and Sartre was a Nobel Laureate. Though they never officially married, they were a couple for 51 years. Aside from their great solo accomplishments, they also gave us this gift: They proved that romantic love and intellectual equality could coexist, even thrive together, with the help of creative negotiation. I propose we make them your inspirational role models for now. The coming months will be a favorable time to deepen and refine your devotion to crafting satisfying, interesting intimate relationships.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Over 2,600 years ago, ancient Babylonian astronomers figured out the highly complex cycle that governs the recurrence of lunar and solar eclipses. It unfolds over a period of 18 years and 11 days. To analyze its full scope required many generations of researchers to carry out meticulous record-keeping with extreme patience. Let's make those Babylonian researchers your role models, Capricorn. In the coming months, I hope they inspire you to engage in careful observation and persistent investigation as you discover meaningful patterns. May they excite your quest to discern deep cycles and hidden rhythms.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): I invite you to try this visualization exercise, Aquarius: Picture a rosebud inside your body. It's located in your solar plexus. Imagine it's steadily and gently opening, filling your body with a sweet, blissful warmth, like a slow-motion orgasm that lasts and lasts. Feel the velvet red petals unfolding; inhale the soft radiance of succulent fragrance. As the rose fully blooms, you become aware of a gold ring at its center. Imagine yourself reaching inside and taking the ring with your right hand. Slip the ring onto your left ring finger and tell yourself, "I pledge to devote all my passionate intelligence to my own well-being. I promise to forever treat myself with tender loving respect. I vow to seek out high-quality beauty and truth as I fulfill my life's mission."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): I foresee the arrival of a living fossil, Pisces. An influence you thought was gone may soon reappear. Aspects of your past could prove relevant to your current situation. These might be neglected skills, seemingly defunct connections or dormant dreams. I hope you have fun integrating rediscovered resources and earmarking them for use in the future. PS: Here's a lesson worth treasuring: While the world has changed, a certain fundamental truth remains true and valuable to you.
